

Bids are eating your nights.

One remodeler counts 40+ hours of estimating on a single $100K job. A roofer sends 5 to 8 bids a week, written after dinner. Same scope, same sections, same rates, retyped for the hundredth time.

RUN YOUR OWN MATH

bids per month × hours per bid × what your hour is worth

Get back even half of that 40-hour bid and that's $1,500 to $3,000 of your time. On one bid. And the slow bid costs you twice: the customer signs with whoever gets them a real number first.

Your Bid Bot Your format. Your numbers. Minutes, not nights.

A bid writer trained on your past bids and your rate sheet. Not another piece of software to learn. Talk the job in from the truck, and a formal bid in your format, your wording, and your prices is drafted before you're back at the shop. You approve every number, then send. Same day, sometimes from the driveway.

How it works

1 Send me your past bids

5 to 10 past bids and your rate sheet. That's all I need from you.

2 I build it in about a week

Your template, wording, and pricing rules, pulled from your real bids and tested against them.

3 You talk, it writes

Typed or spoken, phone or desk. It writes the bid. You approve every number and hit send.

Built so it can't lie to you

- It never invents a price. Every number comes from your rate sheet, with the math shown.
- It won't guess. No rate for something? It stops and asks you.
- Nothing leaves without you. You approve every bid before it goes out.

"This was a very easy process. I'm impressed with your professionalism and I'm excited to use my new AI helper."

From $1,000 Most owners start with one: bids.

A quick-turn bid is $1,000. A long, multi-trade estimate has more sections and more pricing rules, so it costs more. Either way, you get a fixed price before any work starts. Proposals, invoices, change orders, and scopes of work are priced the same way.

Best fit: you send four or more bids a month, you know what they cost you in time, and you have a folder of past ones. Fewer than that? I'll tell you straight: you don't need this yet.
